Almost every one of us wants to be on the crest of the wave, to somehow stand out from the crowd. Almost everyone tries to be the center of attention.

And it doesn't matter that only a few people actually end up in this center. More importantly, all people, regardless of their temperament and character, wish that the day will come when they will shine in the rays of glory and praise from all sides will fall on them. Even the quietest quiet people want this long-awaited "finest hour" to come in their lives.

However, you wondered why everyone is so striving for popularity? What's so good about her?

To answer this difficult question, one must look at the consequences of popularity. Or, in simple terms, it is necessary to find out the positive effects that occur when a person becomes popular. With the onset of popularity, the student really gets a lot of advantages.

Firstly, if you are popular, then your opinion will be significant for many. You, so to speak, have your own contingent, which, in fact, makes you popular in the university.

Accordingly, much of what will be suggested by a popular person will be heard. But it's always nice when others listen to your opinion. This makes you almost a god among people.

The next positive moment in popularity is that you have certain concessions in your studies, if your popularity is based on the views of the teachers.

If you have proven yourself well in the face of teachers, then rumors will certainly go about you as a good student. Accordingly, you will no longer be treated as an ordinary "green student", but as someone who means something more than the average student.

Many students enjoy this tacit privilege right. This is their right, they deserve it and no one has the right to condemn them.

Another consequence of popularity is that it is easier for a popular person in a university to break through in life.

Let's give an example: if you curry favor with your teacher in some competition or scientific seminar, won it, or simply performed well, then the next time the teacher will take you to a conference in another city.

Not someone from the outside, but you! Since he is sure that you will not let him down. And he will recommend your candidacy on any teaching council to other teachers.

Since little by little you will be "pushed" to some positions at the university. You will become the chairman of the student council. Or you have to take the reins of government in some other position in the student government.

In any case, you will receive that invaluable experience that will undoubtedly come in handy in your adult life. Plus, you will "grow" with some kind of connections with representatives from other circles (you will speak or represent your university at various events).

Therefore, in this light, popularity will certainly play into the hands of any person.

Of course, everything in the world also has negative sides. But within the framework of this article, we will not focus your attention on this.

After all, now our goal is to prove to you that popularity does not fall from the sky like manna from heaven, it is not bought (students are not show business) for money, but is earned for your specific actions

Then the next logical question will be this question: is popularity still the lot of a few, or can almost anyone who wants to learn it?

Is it possible for an ordinary student like me to gain popularity?

Why not? Who is stopping you in this? After all, our country is full of opportunities, as all the media are now trumpeting right and left.

Therefore, to be popular or not to be is a purely personal decision of each person. Since you are reading this article, accordingly, we believe that you have nevertheless decided to gain popularity among your peers or teachers.

If you are an ordinary student, but dream of fame within the confines of your university or even in a wider audience, then you have to choose in which way you will achieve favor with your people. You can paint a lot about the different ways of gaining popularity.

We will focus only on the most, as it seems to us, simple ways that you can use after reading this post.

So, decide which role suits you best?

1) Expert.

This is a way of gaining popularity in which you will act as a kind of expert on certain issues. For example, if you are strong in law or some other science, then you can advise your comrades on various issues from your area of expertise.

Thus, a certain group of people will form around you, who will already know that this guy or girl is "fumbling about". At the same time, as mentioned above, your classmates will recommend you to their friends and so on.

Thus, you will gain the glory of a real professional in your field and will be popular in your educational institution.
